

Bartending Training

With a career in bartending, you can work anywhere in the world—from a nightclub in Las Vegas to a ski resort in the Alps to a cruise ship sailing the Caribbean. A career in bartending can take you places that you never even imagined.

What is the job outlook for bartenders?

Employment of bartenders is expected to grow eight percent from 2018 to 2028. As people continue to dine out and drink at a variety of food and drinking places, many new bars, taverns, and restaurants are expected to open to meet demand. Job opportunities are expected to be good because of the need to replace workers who leave the occupation. Strong competition is expected for bartending jobs in popular restaurants and fine-dining establishments, where potential earnings from tips are the greatest.

Bartenders' earnings often come from a combination of hourly wages and customer tips. The median hourly wage (including tips) of bartenders was $10.84 in May 2018. The lowest 10 percent earned less than $7.60 per hour, and the top 10 percent earned more than $15.14 per hour. Bartenders work in restaurants; bars; catering establishments; hotels, motels and other traveler accommodations establishments; amusement, gambling and recreation establishments; and civic and social organizations. Bartending can be very lucrative and is an excellent transitional career (source: www.bls.gov/ooh).
